MR. WALKER IS WROTH.

Says the Iron Hall Had Nothing to Do with Philadelphia Bank in Trouble.

Yesterday's issue of the Chicago Tribune contained the following Philadelphia special, dated April 17:

Some time ago many of the leading officials of the Supreme Lodge of Iron Hall started a bank here at the Mutual Security Trust and Safe-deposit Company. The leading spirit of the affair was T. D. Somerby, supreme president of Iron Hall. On March 2 the bank was closed by the State superintendent. Attorney General Hensel in court here moved that the bank be dissolved. The expert for the Commonwealth showed that while the alleged paid-in capital of the concern was $377,785, in fact $100,000 was not paid in at all, but was a purely fictitious capitalization, which was counterbalanced by a cross-entry of $100,000 as a fictitious loan, the value of the shares of the company being placed at $100,000 and treated as security. Among the assets is $87,083 in bonds of the Iron Hall Building Company, a concern that has not a cent of capital, and the other assets were of the wild-cat order. The Iron Hall lodge and members were heavy depositors, and they will lose thousands of dollars. It is likely that criminal suits will be entered against the officials.

On being referred to the telegram E. J. Walker, supreme accountant of the Iron Hall order, which has its headquarters in this city, was exceedingly wroth, and on the impulse of the moment ordered the reporter $10 he would give him the paper from which the special had been clipped. This filled the reporter with sudden glee, and he made for the newspaper, but on second thought was recalled by Mr. Walker, and the offer was retracted.

"This is simply an outrageous and malicious lie, done to injury to this order," said Mr. Walker, when he had read the clipping.

The Iron Hall order has no more to do with the Mutual Security Trust and Safe-deposit Company than it has to do with the Journal Publishing Company. Please wait here for a few minutes and I will run up home and bring you a copy of the Philadelphia Times under date of April 17. It contains a full and correct account of the court proceedings against the bank by the Pennsylvania Commonwealth and the subsequent decision of the court.

In a few minutes the indignant Mr. Walker returned with the paper. The substance of the proceedings, as it appears in the Times, is to the effect that Attorney General W. H. Hensel filed a bill in equity against the bank, asking for the appointment of a receiver, arguing that its capital had been impaired. The bank's office, No. 1317 Arch street, was accordingly closed by the State superintendent. Mr. Stockwell, the bank's solicitor, stated to Mr. Krumpholtz that the parties interested in the bank were willing to order $170,000 in the treasury of the bank early on Monday morning following if Mr. Krumpholtz would allow the bank to be opened for business as usual. This offer was, however, refused. The court was of the opinion that no receiver should be appointed or a decree of dissolution made, and he told the parties to get together and mutually draft a decree providing for the payment into the treasury of $170,000, in accordance with the terms that had been made. This, Mr. Walker says, was done accordingly, and the bank resumed business.

Non-Unionist Badly Used Up at the Belt Road—Claims the Strikers Did It.

John Riley, a non-union workman at the Panhandle shops, was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital by Kregel and Whitsett, yesterday morning, with two of his ribs broken, both eyes blacked and his face badly battered. Riley had gotten tired of his confinement and ventured to take a walk out as far as the Belt railroad the night before, and says that he was approached by five strikers who notified him in the manner described, and might have killed him had he not made his escape back to the shops. Riley was drinking at the time.

MEETINGS OF MINISTERS

Common Sense on the License Question Discussed by Rev. A. B. Charpie.

Episcopal Elections—Compliment to Dr. Cleveland by His Methodist Brethren—Rabbi Messing Re-Elected.

At the monthly meeting of the Baptist Ministers' Association, held yesterday morning, at the First Baptist Church, Rev. A. B. Charpie, pastor of Woodruff Place Chapel, read an interesting paper on the subject, "Is License Sin?"

He began with noting the fact that the Methodist General Conference, several years ago, taking up the subject of the liquor traffic, declared the church unalterably opposed to license in every form, because there could be no license without sin. All the larger evangelical churches of this country have adopted substantially the same doctrine. It was held that license laws put a price on crime, and that we cannot upon our conscience have any part in it. If prohibition is right there remains no more question, and the debate is closed. Shall we grant to men the right to destroy their fellows and thus make the State a partner in the crime? God forbid.

We do not seem very near prohibition in Indiana. While the great mass of us agree with our third-party friends in our desire for final prohibition, many of us do not agree with them that it is wise as voters to periodically disfranchise ourselves until that result is reached. Therefore it would not appear unreasonable to seek for some plan by which, while waiting for prohibition, the sincere friend of temperance may favor such measures for the advancement of the cause as may be allowable, and that, too, without being marked as enemies of the cause.

Mr. Charpie next dwelt upon the misuse of the word license. He said we thought a bloody war thirty years ago to settle for ever the great fact that we are a Nation, and that the Nation is greater than the State. A man wishes to retail liquor, and on payment of $5, without further question, the government grants him a license to retail intoxicating liquors for one year, in a certain place in Indiana. He takes up his license and begins business. He is arrested by a constable. Justice says you must settle this matter with the State. The government hasn't gone into the business of running the liquor traffic. That belongs to the State. He pays his fine and license fee, sells again, and once more is arrested. This time by the village authorities of Greenwood, and again fined as a criminal, notwithstanding he holds so-called licenses from both his government and the great State of Indiana. He may plead that he is in partnership with the State, but that avails nothing. The courts and the temperance orators are at variance in the opinions of the courts prevail. What's the trouble? Simply that what is called a license is not a license at all, but a receipt for a special tax. Oh, you tax business in your country! We tax the whiskey business, but none other. The moment a man applies for a license to sell liquor the State begins to regard him with suspicion. It presumes every citizen's character is good, but he alone is required to prove it affirmatively. Not only so, but before the State will accept his tax, he is required to bond that he will not become a criminal for one year, and if he does he will pay all fines and penalties that may be adjudged against him as a criminal. Surely a very sort of partner for the State.

We must not forget the temperance sentiment of our country is a recent growth. License has nothing to do with the moral question. Liquor laws are police regulations, made to confine the business within moderate bounds. The tax or license law has never attempted to honor or dishonor a citizen. It has never been otherwise than under a legal cloud. How can any moral quality be injected into the question of license? Prohibition, which is a secular issue now not probably for many years to come. The law we already have is prohibitory as to Sundays, legal holidays, minors, and carding on election days. What wrong can there be in making the liquor traffic pay its own bill? Strangely enough, the most pronounced opponents of the law are those who are the bitter enemies of the traffic. The great body of citizens would welcome it as a relief from an unreasonable burden, but temperance men are afraid to continue in the future, as in the past, to tax ourselves and our children to save taxes for liquor-sellers. The liquor traffic is a part in the crime of liquor-selling, we should ask our legislators to legislate for the people, not for the liquor traffic. The liquor traffic is a part in the crime of liquor-selling, we should ask our legislators to legislate for the people, not for the liquor traffic. The liquor traffic is a part in the crime of liquor-selling, we should ask our legislators to legislate for the people, not for the liquor traffic.

"As an officer of the law," said Mr. Charpie, in conclusion, "I have no experience in enforcing liquor laws or other laws. Within reasonable limits I think it the duty of Christian ministers, with all their good citizens, to lend their influence to that end. But to transform our churches into military camps, our deacons into private detectives on saloons, or police officers, would be to surrender the dignity of the high commission by which we are called, and as one minister my purpose is to continue to spend my strength in persuading men by the power of the Gospel rather than by the policeman's mace."

Methodist Ministers.

The Methodist ministers, at their meeting yesterday morning, paid a graceful compliment by electing Rev. H. A. Cleveland, D. D., president of their association for the ensuing year. The new officers elected are as follows: Horace A. Cleveland, president; B. W. Cooper, Irvington, vice-president; C. A. Stockbarger, Haughville, secretary, and Messrs. Chaffee, Toiv and M. B. Hyde executive committee. Rev. L. F. Dimmitt, pastor of the Madison-avenue Methodist Church, read a paper on "The Human Element," in which he pointed out the inconsistencies, which he held were obviously due to the human limitations of the writers. He was of opinion that the study of this subject would yield a solution of many difficult questions without impairing faith in the Bible.

Episcopal Elections.

The following vestry was elected at the annual meeting of the Holy Innocents Church last night: Senior warden, Charles B. Stitz; junior warden, Timothy F. Bassett. The vestrymen are George Bannan, Richard Jones, Milton H. Danahy, Frank Goheen, Charles Otto, Fred A. Lorenz and Charles Schaeffer. Christ Church yesterday morning elected I. H. Kiersted senior warden and R. L. Talbott junior warden. The vestrymen elected are N. F. Dalton, Dr. G. W. Sloan, W. A. Taylor, C. E. Dr. D. G. Pfaff, W. H. Armstrong and Chas. E. Brooks. The officers are R. L. Talbott treasurer and C. E. Brooks secretary.

At St. Paul's Church, yesterday.

E. Snyder and Aquila Q. Jones were re-elected wardens and William J. Holliday, John W. Murphy, Francis A. Coffin, E. Miller, Charles Maguire, Mayor Sullivan and Dr. Edwin R. Lewis vestrymen.

Denounced the Ex-Secretary.

At the Second Baptist (colored) Church, yesterday morning, there was a meeting of the Ministers' and Deacons' Union. Rev. J. F. Broyles was elected chairman and Rev. J. W. Carr secretary, the latter to take the place of Rev. A. C. Chichan, who had tendered his resignation and denounced the necessity of baptism. Mr. Chichan was in turn denounced as an unworthy shepherd. The amount of money collected at seven colored churches of this city on Sunday was reported as $154.27.

The gospel meetings conducted by the pastor, D. K. Lucas, at the Central Christian Church, are still in progress, with a sermon each evening this week. Thirty persons have already united with the church since the meetings began, and the attendance has been large. The song serv-

MONUMENT DECORATIONS.

Brewster Gets the Naval Astragal and Key-Stones—No Award on the Army Emblem.

The Monument Commission convened yesterday to inspect the models submitted for the naval and army astragals, and also for the key-stones. Five designs for the army astragals have been received, including three from European artists. The commission will ask for expert opinion before making the award. It is possible all will be rejected, as none are up to the standard of the monument in general. The model for the naval astragal, submitted by Bruno Schmitz, designer of the monument, is not the equal, in the commission's opinion, with the model offered by Brewster, author of the crown-tower figure, and the latter was instructed to proceed with the elaboration of his design for casting. The key-stones offered are also by Brewster, and are of similar merit with the crowning piece. One represents a woman's face, graceful and beautiful in face, wearing an expression of sorrow for the dead, mingled with an invitation to all who may look to imitate the valor. The other stone has a female face in a triumphant expression, telling in delicate lines, however, a story of bravery and patriotic devotion. The commission approved the models unanimously and spontaneously, and will give the artist an order for them. They adorn opposite sides of the monument.

BRIEF TARIFF SERMON.

If that on Twine Goes Off Indianapolis Gets No Factory—Cheaper Wages Abroad.

W. B. Holton has received a letter from the Belfast (Ireland) Rope-work Company, which, referring to the recent visit of Mr. Fern to this city prospecting for a location, says:

"We agree with you in thinking that if we decide to build our new mill in the States, Indianapolis would be one of the best, if not the best location. Apparently, there is cheap labor to be had, abundance of female labor, and moderate rates, and the position is a very central one for distribution. If, however, the duty upon burlap is taken off altogether, it would be decidedly more advantageous to build our factory on this side, and indeed, we doubt if it would not be better in any case to build here, since the advantages of wages and expenses generally are so much lower than with you, and besides we would have our factory under our constant and personal supervision. If our managing director goes out to the States he will not fail to visit Indianapolis." The letter bears the date of April 9.

NORTH INDIANAPOLIS TERRORIZED.

Mad-Dog Goes Through the Town Pursued by Host of the Population.

Yesterday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, the greater part of the country from Kissel's road-house to North Indianapolis, inclusive, was terrorized by a perigrinating mad-dog, belonging to Tom Lewis. The dog started from the vicinity of the road-house on a bee-line north, biting two or three dogs and a cow on his way to Crown Hill. The neighborhood was aroused and started in pursuit, following the dog through Crown Hill and on toward North Indianapolis, where the children were locked in a butcher shop and other convenient places until the dog left the town, coming back by way of the ice-houses to the place he started from, where James Barnhill, who was mounted on horse-back, overtook and shot the dog. It is not learned whether or not the animals bitten by the dog have been killed.
